

ZERO ZERO

UK households are owed £24 billion a year.

Most never claim it.

THE PROBLEM

£24bn of UK benefits and support goes unclaimed every year, across 7 million households — an average of £3,428 each. It is not an eligibility problem. It is an information problem: people do not know what exists, or what to ask for.

Only 8.6% of the 6.2 million UK households eligible for a social broadband tariff have one. Most have never heard of it.

WHAT IT DOES

A postcode and fourteen short questions. Then a ranked wall of things you can actually do — each one a real scheme, with a cited source and a form to fill in. Not an article to read.

- Money. 63 verified actions, ranked by what you qualify for and what you can afford to act on. Someone who says money is tight is never shown a £2,000 purchase.
- Crisis. 21 routes to human help in fixed triage order — food, creditor protection, income, housing, safety. Each one carries the exact words to say when someone picks up.

WHY IT HOLDS UP

- Never guesses eligibility. If we have not asked, we do not claim it — enforced in code, not in policy.
- Sourced and dated. Every figure traceable. Two dead government schemes caught in a single week of building.
- Deterministic, not generative. Same profile in, same result out. Every card auditable to a citation — no model inventing entitlements.
- Signposting, not advice. Outside the FCA perimeter. Ships now, no regulatory drag, every route ends at a regulated human.
- It has a crisis path. No consumer money app does.

WHY THIS FOUNDER

Gary P built Zero Zero to help people save money. Then his Jobseeker's Allowance ran out, Universal Credit was blocked by a property he could not sell, and he was carrying debt and housing risk with children to support.

He opened his own app. It had nothing for him.

The crisis path exists because he needed it and it was not there. Now Lead AI Product Design at NTT — and building this for the people still where he was.

STATUS — STATED PLAINLY

Built and verified. Pre-launch, no users yet.

- 84 actions and crisis routes live, every URL and figure checked against a live source.
- 546 automated assertions covering eligibility, safety and staleness.
- UK launch next. Quarterly re-verification of every entitlement.

MODEL

Free forever for the person using it. Revenue is B2B2C, from organisations that already carry a duty of care and a budget: employers, housing associations, local authorities, credit unions and utilities. The crisis path will never monetise — that is a deliberate decision, not an oversight.

MARKET — UK FIRST, THEN

UK: one benefits system, one language, a £24bn pool.

Ireland next — nearest system, same language.

Europe is not one market. It is 27 entitlement systems. The engine ports; the library does not — and that is the moat.

Whoever builds a country's library first owns that country.

TWO DOORS

Investment — pre-seed, to launch in the UK and land the first pilot partners.

Partnership — employers, housing associations, councils and advice charities.

Also wanted: frontline debt and welfare advisers to review the crisis routes before public launch.
